Twelve 2012 Predictions For The Telecom Industry

What can we expect for the fast-moving telecommunications market next year? Plenty of new records in both the handset and PC industries, the primacy of India over China, the beginning of the end of WiMax and a sharper focus on less-publicized areas like M2M, according to Pyramid Research. In a recent report, the researcher, which is the telecom research division of UBM TechWeb's Light Reading Communications Network, offered 12 detailed predictions for the global telecom industry. Here's what made Pyramid's list:

- The global telecommunications services market will grow at a 4% rate in 2012, down from 7% in 2011. The drop is a result of the rising volatility and uncertainty in the global economy.
- Total service revenue for the global telecom services market will reach $1.7 trillion or 2.4% of global GDP (gross domestic product) in 2012.
- Emerging market players like America Movil, Airtel and MTN will move up in the global rankings of telecom companies while developed market players like Deutsche Telekom and Vodafone will lose ground. The regions America Movil, Airtel and MTN dominate – Latin America, India and Africa, respectively – are simply more high-growth markets for telecom.
- The number of global mobile subscriptions will pass the 6 billion mark in February. Asia-Pacific – on its own, as a region – will pass the 3 billion marker in January.
- India will pass China to become the world's largest mobile market in terms of subscriptions. • The 4G technology WiMax (once championed by Sprint in the U.S.) will see the beginning of its end in Asia. Like operators in other regions, Asian operators will opt for the rival 4G technology LTE instead.
- Broadband penetration of the world's population will pass the 10% mark globally

- Operators' growth will increasingly depend on their having a cloud computing strategy, an approach for the high-growth IT service market and a clear value proposition for the enterprise market.
- IPTV (Internet Protocol TV – think Verizon's FiOS or AT&T's U-verse) penetration of the world's population will pass the 1% mark globally.
- The number of active (installed) PCs worldwide will pass the 2 billion mark.
- The mobile handset market will surpass the $200 billion mark.
